PITTSFIELD CHARTER TOWNSHIP

By Mary Campbell

Pitt Township was organized in the log cabin home of John Gilbert on Michigan Avenue April 8, 1834, in accordance with permission granted on March 7, 1834, by the Territorial Legislature. John Allison was elected the first supervisor. An advertisement two years earlier in The Emigrant had called for a meeting to consider forming a township government. This preliminary meeting adopted Ezra Carpenter's suggestion that the township be named Pitt in honor of the British statesman William Pitt, the Elder. The area, surveyed in 1819 as Town 3 South, Range 6 East, had formerly been included in Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti and Saline Townships. Organization came almost ten years after the first purchase of land in the township made by Isaac Markham on May 12, 1824, in the 2500 block of South State Street.

The earliest settlement, however, was on the land along Packard and Washtenaw Roads in the vicinity of Platt and Carpenter Roads that became known as the Mallett Creek settlement. Although George Noyes made the first land purchase in the area, the first settlers were Oliver Whitmore and Samuel McDowell who made their purchases on June 7, 1824. They were soon followed by other families, most of whom came from New York State.

The first birth was a son born to Charles Anderson in November 1824. In the fall of 1825 the first schoolhouse erected in Washtenaw County was built and Harriet Parsons (later Mrs. Lorin Mills) was the first teacher. On September 12th of that year "the first adult death" was that of Emily Whitmore, daughter of Luke and Phebe Whitmore. The land on the father's farm surrounding her grave became the early cemetery now known as Whitmore-Terhune between Packard and Terhune Streets. The first wedding was the county's first double wedding when Deacon Ezra and Raney Maynard's daughter Laura, married John Anderson and Abigail (Abby) married James Turner Allen (brother of John Allen, Ann Arbor's co-founder) at the Maynard home, now called Cobblestone Farm. The first fire recorded destroyed in 1829 the home and possessions of the newly married Russell and Hannah Coning Parker.

Although visiting ministers came to the township at an early time, the earliest record we have of religious meetings was the Sunday School held under the oak trees near the intersection of Packard and Platt Roads in the summer of 1825. Ezra Whitmore remembered Elzada Fairbrother as a teacher and Lorin Mills named his wife as another early teacher. Having no initial church within the township, residents were involved in the formation of churches in neighboring Ann Arbor, Saline, or Ypsilanti. A Baptist minister, Elder J. S. Twiss, lived in the township from 1827 to 1829 and held meetings in homes and schools. He became the second minister of the First Baptist Church of Ann Arbor from 1831 to 1836. Around 1845, at a meeting in the school house near Textile and Campbell Roads, the First Wesleyan Society of Pittsfield was organized. A church was erected nearby in 1846. The Everts and Stewart Atlas of 1874 marks the location in Section Twenty-seven.

There was a Mallett Creek post office from 1834 to 1839. In addition, mail was distributed from two other stage stop post offices: Pitt in the northwest part of the township and Pittsfield on Michigan Avenue, a little east of Platt Road. Pittsfield was re-established at Pittsfield Junction in 1879 and operated until the end of 1907.

In 1839 the state legislature granted permission to change the township name from Pitt to Pittsfield. Early town meetings were sometimes held in homes (John Gilbert's and Talmon Brown's) but usually "at the school house near Charles Woodard's." The first township hall built on Morgan Road in 1853 was used a little over one hundred years.

The County Board of Supervisors in 1837 purchased land in Section Three from Claudius Britton, Jr., to establish a County Poor Farm. Later changed to a County Hospital, the building was closed in the summer of 1971, and razed in 1979. Today some of this property is used for a park.

When the Civil War brought many young men to the support of the colors the township supplied financial aid. In 1863 a tax was voted "to pay bounties to any man who would" enlist. Township bonds were sold in order to pay these "bounties to volunteers."

After the war two railroads passed through the township: The Ypsilanti, Hillsdale and Indiana Railroad (Huckleberry) in 1869 and the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern Railroad (Ann Arbor) in 1870. Their crossing near the center of the township became known as Pittsfield Junction, an important railroad center for the township with a Pittsfield post office. A few years after R. F. D. (Rural Free Delivery) was established in Pittsfield, the post office was discontinued. The former crossing can only faintly be seen today as an old raised road-bed crossing the Ann Arbor Railroad tracks. In 1890 a street car line was built along the south side of Packard Road from Ypsilanti to Ann Arbor developing into the interurban known in 1900 as the Detroit, Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor Railway Company. This line lasted until 1929. The Ypsilanti and Saline Electric Railroad Company ran along Michigan Avenue.

The township was recognized as having excellent farmland. The 1910 census conveys the idea that everyone was a farmer. However, Pittsfield's first working platt, 56 lots named Ardmore Gardens, was recorded in June 8, 1912 by Grafton Johnson. This land was along Jewett Avenue near the city of Ann Arbor. New urbanizing trends were developing.

In 1920 women's suffrage became a reality. It was seven years later that a woman, Esther Heining, became an office holder as clerk when appointed to fill a vacancy. However, she did not run at the next election. Ruth McCalla became the first woman elected to the town board when she became treasurer in the 1950s.

In 1948 a fire department was started and kept its equipment in the garage of fire chief Howard Losey. A new township hall including a fire station was built on Ellsworth Road at South State Street in 1955, and added to in 1983. A separate fire station was built on Michigan Avenue in 1975 to accommodate larger trucks built to cope with higher buildings. A police department was established in 1969. Over the years utilities, planning and building inspection, and a recreation department with public parks and a senior citizen organization developed.

On November 19, 1972, the people voted to become a Charter Township. The township has lost its original square shape as about one-third of the land has been annexed to the cities of Ann Arbor or Saline. Most of that part of the township north of I-94 has become part of Ann Arbor, except Sections 1 and 7. Most of Section 31 and a part of Section 30 are now in the city of Saline. However, no section has been entirely annexed so that care is necessary to determine the administrative orientation of some properties.

The Geddes family is the only one we know who has owned their land from the land patent. As William Geddes did not come until 1844 to live on the land he purchased in 1827, the Sutherland-Wilson and Cody-Knicely families have claim to being the families longest in the township. George Jacob and Katherine Schlimmer Kempf are believed to be Pittsfield's first German-born landowners in the 1840s. Some of the other families who were early settlers include Harwood, Morgan, Farnill-Smith-Brown, Campbell-Katz, Nordman, Gutekunst, Bohnet-Hagan, Godfrey-Onago, Douglass-Ticknor, Rentschler, Steere and Hutzel.

The Pittsfield Historical Society, organized in November 1985, has on display at the township hall several cases of artifacts from early days. Members are collecting historical materials and celebrating Michigan's Sesquicentennial.

PITTSFIELD UNION SABBATH SCHOOL, 1892

A large framed picture of the Pittsfield Union Sabbath School members, dated 1892, found in the Pittsfield Charter Township Hall, lists and pictures 178 persons of many ages. The Pittsfield Union Sabbath School met in the Roberts school which was near Carpenter Road on Michigan Avenue. In 1878 a room was added to the school for Sunday School purposes and paid for by the Sunday School. Members came from several school districts, principally Roberts, Townhall and Carpenter Districts. This Sabbath School is the best documented but it is known that other Sunday Schools met in other township schools. One at least remained active until the 1930s.
